The Gottlieb C. Friesinger Society is named after the first Vanderbilt chief of Cardiology, Gottlieb C. Friesinger, II (Bud), and was created in 2000 by former cardiovascular medicine fellows who trained under him. Dr. Friesinger served as chief from 1971 through 1990 and continued to be involved with teaching activities at Vanderbilt until his passing in 2012. The members of the Society are a group of dedicated cardiologists of all specialties who established an endowment and chair in honor of and named after Dr. Friesinger. As part of its mission, the Society meets annually, inviting faculty and former and current fellows to engage in social and educational activities.
